

I would like to urge the FCC to not restrain competition. I chose XM radio because local terrestrial stations were not meeting my programming or listening desires. Restricting competition by restricting satellite radio content does not help meet my programming needs, it only works to preserve the status quo and enrich mega-media concerns like Clear Channel. Do not give in to the pressure from the NAB or terrestrial stations to restrict programming. I am enjoying my new options that XM has provided me and believe that competition will make radio at every level stronger.
